

THE EVENING STAR.

WASHINGTON, D. C., WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1883.
CROSBY S. NOYES, Editor.

The Evening Star has a regular, permanent staff of writers, and its editorial policy is to publish all news of importance, and to give to its readers the most reliable and complete information possible.

The Star office is connected with the Telephone Exchange. Advertisements, orders for the paper by mail and otherwise, news, or any information or business can be sent day or night, free of charge.

Speaker Carlisle's committee list is spoken of everywhere. There are individual cases of malfeasance, but his spirit of fairness and the good judgment displayed in the selections as a whole commend the committee. The House itself, for a wonder, is also pleased. It is evident that the committee will have its confidence, and that there will be more influence than in the last Congress. The Speaker showed wisdom in not scattering honors too freely. In most cases where members were assigned to a committee, they were given no more than an appointment of consequence. They are not only enabled the Speaker to distribute his gifts more equitably, but will expedite business by concentrating the labors of members. Where the same man is on three committees it generally results in his neglecting the work of one or perhaps all three.

There is very little chance of the national banks getting the legislation they want this winter. The best they can expect is that no hostile change in existing law will be made. Judge Buckner adheres to his policy of a treasury note circulation, and his views on the subject, even if not ratified by the two houses of Congress, will probably block any attempt to enact legislation favorable to the banks. Mr. Buckner says he regards Controller Knox's plan as one that will afford only temporary relief at the best, while he thinks the time has come to provide for a permanent currency. Speaker Carlisle believes that the best way to prevent the banks in their circulation is not by legislating directly in their behalf, but by so reducing the revenues that the debt shall be paid off slowly and the bonds, on which the circulation is based, be allowed to remain for a longer period than will be possible if the surplus is not cut down.

It is reported that the Duchess of Montrose, who attended her family by marrying Mr. Crawford, a leading sporting man in England, intended to resign her title for her second husband, who lately died, by erecting in his memory a tomb of unprecedented grandeur. She has bought a fine site in London at an enormous cost, and says she will erect upon it a monument to the best of the world in this particular line. Her ambition is, so she says, to excel the tribute of Artemesia, whose magnificent sepulchre to her deceased husband, Mausolus, gave the name to ambitious monumental architecture. The Duchess will have to do much to put the Queen's monument to the Prince Consort in the shade, for, in spite of some glaring blunders, the Albert memorial is one of the most splendid monuments that taste and wealth can furnish; and she will be obliged to work even harder yet if she intends to equal the testimonial raised by the Mogul Emperor Jehan to his beloved consort, Moon-taj, near Agra on the Jumna river. This not-to-be-doubted of the purest white marble, and radiant with precious stones, cost, it is estimated, fifteen million dollars, so that the fond Duchess must go deep into her rent-roll to "beat the record."

Persons who are in the habit of becoming intoxicated and pleading that fact, with the added claim that they did not know what they were about, as an excuse for any wrong-doing committed while under the influence of liquor, find the sand slipping from under their feet, as it were, in the light of some recent judicial decisions on the subject. One of the most important of these is that of Judge Davis, of New York, who lately held that a man who commits a crime while intoxicated is equally guilty with a sober man committing the same offense. It is his responsibility for the act of getting drunk. This is both sound law and good common sense. No man has the legal or moral right to put himself in a condition where he becomes dangerous to himself, and, if, in place of drunkenness, he were allowed as an excuse for crime, all an intending law-breaker need do would be to fill himself with bad whiskey before undertaking such offenses against law as he might choose to commit.

The discussion in the democratic party on the tariff question is regarded in party councils as a very serious one, and the leaders are studying out a solution that shall commend the conservative and popular support next year. It is to bring the two wings of the party closer together that the Philadelphia question to Speaker Carlisle has been arranged for next month. At this time he is to be the guest of the Commonwealth Club of Philadelphia, and under these auspices will meet the representatives of that city and of Pennsylvania, and the protection states generally. Mr. Carlisle, in his remarks on taking the chair, promised to pursue a cautious policy as to revenue changes, and will no doubt have the wisdom of such a course impressed upon him at the Philadelphia conference.

France presents her compliments to Great Britain and thanks her for her kind offer of mediation in the Tongkin matter, and will accept her assistance as soon as France shall have completed its conquest and got all its wants. This seems to be the interpretation of the reported decision of the public France not to listen to outside suggestions of peace compromise until its forces occupy Bac-Ninh.

The Alaska Seal Company monopoly seems to have a new and active rival in the seal fishery, who, learning of the anxiety of the ladies to wear their pretty fur, have voluntarily come to New York harbor in large numbers and let themselves be caught without resistance.

The weather yesterday was not of the most cheerful sort for Christmas festivities, but the gloom of gloom perhaps rather belated by contrast the enjoyment of the good cheer within comfortable, well-warmed houses. But it was a busy day for the hungry, salivating poor.

There is a feeling abroad in Washington that it might be well for Mr. George Bliss to clear his skirts of the suspicion that he has not tried very hard to convict the star route thieves, or some of them.
